

Situation Statement: There are not enough rural health workers undertaking research and as a result research is not conducted in rural contexts. This contributes to a lack of rural specific research being published. Rural health workers are not skilled or experienced in research and are unlikely to undertake research themselves without training or support from outside their workplace. This becomes a problem not just for the rural health workers, but the rural health facilities they work in and the rural communities they serve.

