

Caring for women with an epidural infusion in labour

Epidural infusion provides segmental, targeted analgesia and is effective for controlling acute pain during the process of labour. Caring for women with an epidural infusion in labour requires an understanding of the associated risks and complications.

This introductory module supports your learning on how to care for women receiving an epidural infusion during labour.

By completing this module you will be able to:

- describe the mechanism of action of an epidural infusion used for analgesia during labour
- deliver safe and effective care to women receiving an epidural infusion during labour
- recognise and respond to risks and complications associated with an epidural infusion used in labour.
