

Helping you shape an inclusive workplace for people with disability

NSW Health is committed to employing more people with disability and improving their experience in the workplace. To achieve this, we need to understand the different types of disability and how to take a person-centred approach to creating and enabling an inclusive and accessible workplace.

These modules are designed to provide managers with information, knowledge and practical tips to foster an inclusive workplace for staff with disabilities. Through scenario-based learning activities, you will explore:

- the social definition and an overview of the different forms of disability
- the importance of understanding individual needs and choices in creating inclusive and accessible workplaces
- practical actions for managers across the full employee lifecycle, including workplace adjustments.
